

Parkside Sustainability Statement

Sustainability aligns with the mission and values of Parkside's organisation. As a charity our goal is to make a positive impact and address societal or environmental issues. By incorporating sustainable practices, we want to enhance the effectiveness and longevity of our programs, ensuring that our work can be delivered for generations to come.

Parkside's ethical responsibility reflects our responsibility to minimise harm and promote the well-being of people and the planet. By adopting sustainable practices, we will demonstrate our commitment to responsible stewardship of resources, minimising environmental impact, and addressing social issues. This ethical stance enhances our credibility and trustworthiness among donors, beneficiaries, and the wider community.

Parkside considers the long-term impact on causes we support. By considering the long-term consequences of our actions, we can design programmes and projects that address the root cause(s) of issues rather than providing short-term fixes. This approach increases the effectiveness and sustainability of our interventions, leading to more significant and lasting change.

Parkside practices resource efficiency and making the most of its resources. By reducing waste, optimising energy consumption, and implementing sustainable practices, we aim to minimise costs and maximise the value of every resource spent. This, in turn, helps allocate more resources towards our core mission, supporting our beneficiaries and achieving greater impact.

Donors, both individual and institutional, are important to Parkside and we are aware of their expectations regarding sustainability and social responsibility. By integrating sustainability into our operations, we aim to reassure donors that we prioritise these values.

Parkside believes positive public perception of our sustainability values enhances our public image and reputation. Our approach to quality and operating practices aims to demonstrate our commitment to being a responsible and forward-thinking organisation.

Considering resilience and adaptability and long term implications of our actions will make Parkside better placed to respond to environmental, social, and economic challenges. This adaptability will help us navigate uncertainties and remain effective in the face of evolving needs and contexts.

Sustainability matters to Parkside, we want our values to remain strong and to continue to uphold our ethical responsibilities, maximise impact, optimise resource allocation, meet donor expectations, and enhance public perception, to overall ensure our long-term resilience. By integrating sustainability into our operations, we will create a positive, long lasting difference in the lives of our beneficiaries and the community we live in.
